FDA Warning About the Dangers of Hand Sanitizers with Methanol

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has issued a warning to consumers and healthcare providers about hand sanitizer products that are labeled as containing ethanol, also known as ethyl alcohol, but have tested positive for methanol contamination. Methanol (i.e., methyl alcohol or wood alcohol) is a substance that can be toxic when absorbed through the skin or ingested, and can be life-threatening when ingested. As per the FDA news update, "Methanol is not an acceptable active ingredient for hand sanitizers and must not be used due to its toxic effects. FDA's investigation of methanol in certain hand sanitizers is ongoing. The agency will provide additional information as it becomes available."

FDA has identified more than two dozen hand sanitizers that are toxic when absorbed through the skin. It is urgent that this information be shared with program staff and families, and others who can disseminate this information.

Consumers who have been exposed to a hand sanitizer containing methanol and are experiencing symptoms should seek immediate treatment for the potential toxic effects of methanol poisoning. Substantial methanol exposure can result in:

- Nausea
- Vomiting
- Headaches
- Blurred vision
- Permanent blindness
- Seizures

Although people of all ages are at risk for methanol poisoning, "young children who accidentally ingest these products and adolescents and adults who drink these products as an alcohol (i.e., ethanol) substitute are most at risk."
